Cuban Dilemma

I was very dismayed by the article on the Cuban exiles (Oct. 28) by Dan Kurzman.

While many American citizens, including Congressmen, are crying about the "Cuban threat to our security," our CIA "under the table" is spending $70,000 to $90,000 a month against Cuba. This is hypocrisy if I ever saw it. Who's a threat to whom? It's time we Americans face the facts.

I feel it is a whole lot more patriotic to speak out against those practices you feel to be unjust than it is to fall in line with something that could not possibly be justified by any impartial judge. It also takes courage.

The selfishness of these Cuban rebels is demonstrated by their inability to cooperate with one another. My sympathies are with those poor people who are left in Cuba who never have had anything and are still paying the biggest price for all this strife and confusion and who will continue to pay for any further efforts against Castro.

I say give Cuba a chance at the Alliance for Progress. I'm sure a gesture of this kind would do much more toward destroying communism and creating respect for our principles in Cuba than all the money the CIA can pour into the Cuban Rebels.
